A Brief Biographical Sketch OF THE LATE

Dr. Joseph Thoburn, of West Va., BY J. C. HUPP, M. D., Of Wheeling, West Virginia.

Extract.—At a meeting of the medical profession of Wheeling, held October 22, 1864, to adopt resolutions of respect for the character and memory of Dr. Joseph Thoburn, late a Colonel in the service of the United States, Dr. Hupp having read to the meeting some of the most interesting incidents in the life of the deceased, it was Resolved, That he be requested to use them in preparing a biographical sketch of Col. Thoburn for publication.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH. Joseph Thoburn, M. D., of Wheeling, West Virginia, was born near Belfast, Ireland, April 29, 1825.

When he was about three months old, his father, Mr. Matthew Thoburn, an intelligent and highly respected citizen, and an exemplary christian, emigrated to the United States, and settled in Belmont county, Ohio.

His educational advantages were only such as the common school of the country district where his parents lived afforded. He secured a thorough English education, and by a diligent course of reading, his mind was at an early age, well disciplined, and well stored with general information.

When he was about eight years of age he began to teach in Belmont county, and spent three years in this occupation. His attention having been directed to medicine, in 1847 he became a pupil of the accomplished Dr. Ephraim Gaston, of Morristown, Tenn., and spent two years and subsequently prosecuted his studies in the office of Prof. Carter, of Starling Medical College, in which institution, at the age of 25, he graduated.

After his graduation, Dr. Thoburn located in Cooke's Landing, Belmont county, Pa., where he practiced nearly two years, and was in the enjoyment of a large share of public confidence, when November 1, 1851—he was called to the Ohio Lying-in Asylum, July 1, 1852, he was removed, together with all the other officers in the Institution, on account of his political relations.

Spent July and August, 1852, in New York Hospital, and in September settled in Wheeling.

December 13, 1853, he married Miss Kate A., eldest daughter of Rev. Benjamin Mifflin, D. D., of Mount Pleasant, Ohio. Having resumed a general practice in Wheeling, his influence was not slow in making itself felt in this new field of labor. Endowed as he was with various and excellent qualities, a nature and manner gentle and companionable, he came rapidly into the enjoyment of public confidence.

And his admitted merit, the extent of his information, the weight of his character, the directness and integrity of his purpose, all conspired to give him the highest esteem and respect of his medical brethren.

Here he was successfully attending to the duties of his profession when the rebellion broke out. Prompted by a sterling patriotism, which nothing but death could extinguish, he entered into the service of his country, acting during the three months' campaign as Surgeon of the 1st regiment loyal Virginia volunteer infantry, and as soon as he had accomplished his reorganization under the second call for troops, he was chosen Colonel of the same regiment, which, with its brave leader, carried out to the army of civilization and good government on so many bloody fields.

A braver heart never beat in human bosom. He had five or six horses shot under him, in the various battles in which he was engaged.

In 1862, Col. Thoburn was in the engagement at Blue's Gap, also the first battle at Winchester, where he was severely wounded in the left arm, which rendered him for some time unfit for duty.

He was in all the battles and skirmishes in the Shenandoah valley, under General Banks. He fought in the battles of Port Republic and Cedar Mountain. Though sick, he fought at the second Bull Run battle, having been in the saddle for three weeks, when he should have been in the hospital. At length, he was stricken down with typhoid fever, and lay at Alexandria, Va., delirious for many weeks, during which time there was but little hope of his recovery. But, "as General Grant said," he came back to the field, leaving behind him a beloved wife and three lovely children, to whom he was most ardently attached.

During the year 1863, he was on duty in the Valley of Virginia, at North Mountain, and at Petersburg, in Hardy county. His escape from the latter place with his forces was regarded by military men as the most difficult and successful of the war. During this year he commanded a brigade of the Col. Mulligan. In 1864, he fought with Col. Sigel at the battle of New Market; under Gen. Hunter, he commanded a brigade at the battle of Piedmont.

He fought at the battle of Lynchburg, and was in all the battles and skirmishes in Hunter's raid.

When the renegade Early made his raid down the Valley, and the summer campaign of 1864 was organized, Col. Thoburn was placed in command of a division. He was in command at the hard fought battle at Snicker's Ferry. He led the first division of Gen. Crook's army, which turned the fortunes of the day at the battle of Opequan Creek. He commanded the storming of Fisher's Hill, and advanced with Gen. Sheridan's army up to Harrisonburg. When the rebel army lay near Strasburg, Col. Thoburn requested of Gen. Sheridan permission to go with his division as skirmishers, an undertaking difficult and dangerous—and ascertaining the enemy's strength and position, which request was granted; and after a hot engagement, the object was successfully accomplished. On the 19th of October, 1864, he fell, nobly fighting for his country's flag, at the battle of Cedar Creek, in the Shenandoah Valley.

On that fatal Wednesday morning, a noble man, an illustrious hero, fell, crushed almost admirably gifted intellect, which has at any time been called upon to lead West Virginia troops to victory, was taken from their councils and their active sympathies by the hand of a treacherous foe.

As surgeon colonel of a regiment, as commander of a division or as an attentive to every detail, whether medical, surgical, or administrative, Col. Thoburn was always prompt at the call of every duty.

"He was one of the most amiable of men, modest, humble and unassuming." In his private life, he illustrated some of the best points in his character, in a thousand ways which the public eye would never detect.

He was in the largest and truest sense a benevolent man. He had a large practice among the poor, and in his daily visits his hand was ever open to relieve their wants. If it possibly lay in his power to do so, no one but his wife knew how much he did for the quiet way. Repeated instances might be recorded here in which he assisted others under circumstances which must have cost him no little personal sacrifice.

His charities, which were as numerous as the days he lived, were bestowed without the least ostentation, and without pretension.

Another marked trait of Col. Thoburn's character was his unselfishness. This he regarded as the corner-stone of a true manly character. With him it was no pretence, but in his whole life he never sought any advantage at the expense of another. Nowhere was this more conspicuous than in the army, where jealousy too often mars the harmony which ought to exist among officers. He never lost his character for unselfish patriotism and all the rivalries and jealousies of the camp.

His devotion to principle was another prominent trait of his character. Without offensively obtruding himself and his views on others who differed from him, he adhered to his own convictions with a quiet firmness which nothing could shake. He feared no consequences when once satisfied that a given course was right. Though by no means insensible to public applause, every individual effort for its own sake, and never gave it a thought when any principle was at stake. Whoever calls the momentous events, the gigantic and often acrimonious struggles for freedom, the portentous and brilliant achievements of the army, from 1861 to 1865, fixed the public attention and excited the alternate hopes and fears of contending armies, and was acquainted with Col. Thoburn, will remember that through all these bloody events he continued to advance steadily in public appreciation to fill a yet wider and wider space in the eyes of the country; that on him rests no imputation of having ever purchased favor or advancement by the slightest sacrifice of principle, or of having deviated from any of those equivocal positions which sometimes brings discredit on illustrious names. He was a man of honest temperance, of broad views and of unflinching integrity. He was a true leader, he saw the best points only, he else found so many ways of extending the influence of his character, and he took a favorable view of the conduct of and of society at large. In all his plans, and in all his opinions on the questions of the day, he was accustomed to take broad views and weigh every minute issue involved, and if he erred, it was never on the side of narrow prejudice and bigotry. Few men had a clearer apprehension of the issues involved in the present war than Col. Thoburn. He was settled in the conviction that the overthrow of slavery, which has happened, would come to pass; but, perhaps not a dozen persons knew his opinion. From a long study of the issue involved, viewed in its moral and political aspects, he had reached his conclusions, but it was not in his character to obtrude his views on those who did not sympathize with them. The general elements of his character naturally expanded most freely in the circle of his family and friends, where he was truly and ever at home.

The many many qualities in his character were too conspicuous to escape the notice of any one who was acquainted with him. But whoever had not seen Col. Thoburn in his dwelling or among his friends, knew him but imperfectly. It is indeed rare to meet with one whose varied and distinct, not to say manifold, qualities are so harmoniously blended that any one knowing him as colleague, counselor, friend, should speak of him otherwise than frankly and from the heart, though conscious of the imperfect presentation given of these manifold ornaments of a man so intrinsically great in all the elements which constitute true greatness, and so entirely beloved for all that refers itself to the amenities of domestic life and the sacred endowments of home.

In conclusion, it is proper to add that Colonel Thoburn had the confidence and love of his soldiers in a pre-eminent degree, strikingly manifested in the young soldier who saw his regimental commander in the field, who sobbed and cried until he moved away were present. During the two days that his remains, also the remains of Captain Bier and Sergeant Jenkins, his faithful comrades who had fallen on the same field, lay in state in the appropriately decorated and draped Senate Chamber, in the Capitol, thousands of people mournfully approached with hearts bowed down with grief to take a sorrowful look at these brave heroes, drop a silent tear to their memories, and attest their appreciation of the sacrifices they had made.

The largest funeral procession that ever took place in Wheeling followed Col. Thoburn's remains to Mount Wood Cemetery, where, with military honors, were deposited "all that was left of the loving husband, the tender father, the dutiful son, the good physician, the brave soldier, and the humble and consistent christian."

*Colonel Thoburn was shot by a rebel cavalryman, dressed in our own uniform, the Colonel not knowing the rebel was a foe.

It does not seem possible for high prices to prevail much longer with the necessities of life. From all parts of the country the reports concerning the crops are of the most flattering and hopeful character. With these favorable indications on every hand, we do not see how it is possible to maintain existing high prices for the things we live on. Beef, pork, mutton, butter, cheese, and bread must succumb to the abundance and a new era must be opened in the way of plenty and prices. Verily the poor are to have their day rejoicing, and may it be hastened.

MISCELLANY.

The income returns for 1864, which have been printed, are generally much larger than they were in 1863. The incomes in the east were doubtless larger than they were in 1863, but it is hoped also that the returns have been more honestly rendered. The publication of them may have contributed to this result.

The plasterers at Pittsburgh have resolved that after the 1st of January next, no plaster shall work for houses who shall not put up their own ornaments, and received a report that the hours of work he reduced to eight per day.

In 1860 the United States mails between Washington and Richmond were carried by rail for $300 per mile yearly. For the same service the Post Office Department will hereafter pay but $200 per mile.

The Pennsylvania railroad Company are now issuing tickets by the year, payable in advance, at greatly reduced rates. This is of great advantage to men who travel much, as it obviates the necessity of buying a ticket each trip.

The Imperial family of Russia is said to be very short of money, and obliged to economize.

One of the toasts: "Saratoga Springs, the politician's Paradise, where any man can run for Congress—water."

According to a North Carolina paper, the motto of a large number of the subdued Rebels must be, "turn up the sackcloth and wear mourning for your name will swell the mortuary column."

A fellow in Albany is going to have his life insured, so that when he dies, he can have something to live on, and not be dependent on the cold charities of the world, as he once was.

Towell Colb is reported to have remarked, when he heard of Gov. Johnson's arrest: "Yes!—in him, he'll go to Washington a prisoner, and be sleeping with Andy Johnson in less than a fortnight."

Some of our religious exchanges tell a story about a woman being relieved from a spasm of hysteria by a husband who has known a number of the sex to be strongly affected and greatly benefited by him before this.

Southern News. A Shreveport letter to the New Orleans Times, dated the 4th, reports a heavy storm in Louisiana and Texas. The Red River was rising rapidly, and there was a prospect of navigation lasting till August. Very little cotton has been planted this season west of the Mississippi. What little there is looks well. The field hands are leaving the plantations, and are going to work for hire. The crops are not so good as they were last year. A few of the planters have engaged other hands, but the majority must lose nearly all.

The report of an apprehended insurrection at Richmond was a canard. The freedmen are quiet, and beyond the apprehension of a few for carrying concealed weapons, there has been no trouble. The Richmond Times denies that there is any ill feeling towards the freedmen, and craves to be enlightened by the confederate living as we are, the result of the overthrow of slavery, we have no wrongs to avenge at the expense of the negro. It is for our interest to make him useful as a freedman, and to make him a useful slave would be just as absurd a piece of inhumanity as cruelty to a horse or an ox.

Late Lynchburg, Va., papers state that J. B. Hargrave, a well known citizen of that place, has committed suicide, in a fit of despondency caused by the downfall of the confederacy.

[The country can stand all such suicides with a great deal of complacency.] A correspondent of the Richmond Republic says: Except around Burkesville there are no traces of the war. The crops are good; years are promised for four days; corn is promising well; the people are quiet and industrious. The returned soldiers are manfully going to work. Gen. Johnston is at Buffalo Springs. He is anxious to go to work in some honest occupation, and to leave the army and the obedience to the laws of his country. The Danville railroad has been greatly improved. The timber was cut and bridges built across the Staunton river in four days by the United States authorities. Many army horses and mules are being bought, and more wheat will be sown this fall than for many years past.

The Brownsville (Texas) Ranchero, now printed at Matamoros, is not pleased with President Johnson's amnesty proclamation. It says the plain object of the proclamation is to beggar the South. "It ties the hands of the masses whilst robbing the rich. It swallows up the wealth of the South, and reduces to beggary and poverty the masses of the South. It admonishes the democratic classes to hold still until the fat is taken from the carcasses of rich rebels, when their time will be certainly come. It pretends to favor amnesty and pardon to rebels who may be possessed of less than $20,000, but it is only pretense, for no pledge, no guarantee is given to men of moderate means that they will not sooner or later, be likewise robbed. In fact, express provision is made by which every dollar in the South, no matter to whom belonging, is to be put into Yankee pockets."

SAXE-ON EPIGRAMS.

Once at a social party, Emily K. (A foreign actress of especial note) For saying what other people wrote, And writing it with few can truly say, They ever read at all said with a sneer, "What!—a mechanic and a gentleman! Pray, tell me, sir, are such things common now?"

"Why, no," replied the witliest of men— Looking, the while, serenely in her face, "Perhaps 'tis not a very common thing— But yet such things do happen now and then, Just as in yore (indeed one may chance to be An actress and a lady)—don't you see?"

THE PARVENS' OPINION. Novus, who slyly claim to "high position" is genuine, if wealth can make it true: A youth whose stock—petroleum, not patrie—Shines none the less for being fresh and new.

Standing before a flaming placard, sees, Announcing that the lecture of the night, By the Rev. Father Agnol, of Pericles, Novus, half doubting if he reads aright, Repeats the words, (soliloquizing loud) In numbers yet his subject was unsaid: Why such a theme should gather such a crowd

And through the door with such a mighty row! There is n't one among them, I'll engage, Who cares a cuss about the fellow's age!"

THE GRATEFUL PREACHER. A traveling preacher, "once upon a time," Addressed a congregation rather slim In numbers, yet his subject was unsaid: ("Twas 'Charity'") so serious was the hymn: Fervent the prayer, and, though the house was dim,

He pounded lustily the Sacred Word, And preached an hour as long as he could hawl: As one who meant the Gospel should be heard.

And when, behold, the preacher's hat is sent Among the pews for customary penitence, But soon returned as empty as it went!—"Thank God," he cries, "with such an audience, Although my preaching has been quite in vain."

From the 6th W. Va. Cavalry. CAMP 6TH W. VA. V. CAVALRY, FORT LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS, July 8, 1864.

Editors Intelligencer: You will confer a favor on the friends and relatives of the 6th regiment by inserting the following in the columns of your widely circulated paper:

We moved from Washington, D. C., June 12th and arrived here on the 29th ult., a distance of 1,497 miles. While on the route the 2d battalion, under command of Major Thomas E. Dwyer, participated in a terrible railroad collision at Carlisle, Illinois, on a trestle-work thirty feet high. The trains were running at their usual speed, and the shock was terrible, sending both locomotives and a number of the front cars to atoms. There was one soldier, a member Co. H, killed instantly, and five wounded; two of the latter have since died at St. Louis, Missouri—corporal Thomas J. Smith, and private Elijah Miller, both members of Co. G, Seventh Kansas Cavalry, and a member of Co. G, are recovering. The foreman and engineer of our train were killed instantly, and several others connected with the train injured. The battalion also had seventy-five horses killed.

The body of private E. Corn, Co. K, was found in the vicinity of the camp on the 5th inst. His death was caused by a heavy blow on the head, supposed to have been dealt by a border ruffian, as the noble youth had fallen in the midst of the fight, and people are very numerous in this State.

And now in conclusion I will say a word regarding the feeling of the regiment concerning their discharge from the United States service. We all enlisted with the full expectation of being mustered out of service at the close of the war, and as the dawn of peace approached, every heart rejoiced at the thought of being welcomed home by a noble wife and mother or loving sister, and all our minds were bent on the thought of returning to our homes, and as the day of our discharge drew near, we were all anxious to be mustered out of service at the close of the war, and as the dawn of peace approached, every heart rejoiced at the thought of being welcomed home by a noble wife and mother or loving sister, and all our minds were bent on the thought of returning to our homes.
